Areas of expertise

Dan has over three years' experience working in the private sector for clients on residential, infrastructure (water, utilities and oil), education and mixed-use projects.

Historically, his focus has been on the delivery of major planning permissions through the midlands and the south-east of England. Most of his time was previously spent on traditional house builder-style developments at varying stages, including site identification, promotion and delivering consents.

Most recently, Dan has spent time delivering heritage and landscape sensitive major development schemes, as well as smaller schemes, within and on the boundaries of London.

Key experience

Dan has gained experienced in all stages of the planning process. Considerable experience in conducting planning appraisals has been obtained through leading on land searches for house builders, as well as advising clients on planning risk and the development potential on prospective sites.

Within the planning application process, Dan is particularly experienced in consulting with the public and statutory consultees, writing in-depth technical reports and planning statements for major schemes, in addition to the management of consultants, the programme and actual delivery of schemes.
